FORMATION OF IGNEOUS ROCKS Reading Comprehension

Read the following text and answer the questions below.

Igneous rocks are one of the three main types of rocks found on Earth, alongside sedimentary and metamorphic rocks. They are formed through the cooling and solidification of magma or lava. Magma is molten rock found beneath the Earth's surface, while lava is magma that reaches the surface during volcanic eruptions.

When magma cools slowly beneath the Earth's surface, it forms intrusive igneous rocks. These rocks form large crystals and include examples like granite and diorite. Granite, for instance, is often used as a building material due to its durability and attractive appearance. On the other hand, when lava cools quickly at the Earth's surface, it forms extrusive igneous rocks. These rocks have much smaller crystals and include examples like basalt and obsidian. Obsidian is commonly found in volcanic regions and is used to create sharp-edged tools. Another type of volcanic glass that has been used historically is pumice, a type of volcanic foam that has been used for cleaning and as a lightweight aggregate.

The history of igneous rocks on the state of reading, they contain clues about the Earth's past. When rapid cooling results in small crystals, it indicates a type of igneous rock like rhyolite. On the other hand, large crystals in a rock indicate a type of igneous rock like granite.

Igneous rocks can also be used to determine the age of a rock formation and have significant economic value. Some igneous rocks are used in construction, while others are used in the production of glass. Additionally, igneous rocks can provide information about the Earth's history and the processes that shaped its crust over millions of years.

TYPES OF ROCKS Reading Comprehension

Read the following text and answer the questions below.

Rocks are an essential part of Earth's crust, and they come in three main types: igneous, sedimentary, and metamorphic. Each type forms in different ways and has unique characteristics.

Igneous Rocks: These rocks form from the cooling and solidification of molten magma or lava. When magma cools underground, it forms intrusive igneous rocks like granite. When lava cools on the Earth's surface, it forms extrusive igneous rocks like basalt, which often have a fine-grained texture.

Sedimentary Rocks: Sedimentary rocks are formed from the accumulation and compression of sediments over time. These rocks can be made of minerals, rock fragments, or organic matter. Examples of sedimentary rocks include sandstone, formed from sand grains cemented together, and limestone, composed of calcium carbonate from marine organisms.

Metamorphic Rocks: These rocks are formed from existing rocks that undergo changes in mineral composition and texture due to heat, pressure, or chemical processes. Metamorphic rocks can be foliated, meaning they have a layered or banded appearance, or non-foliated. Examples include marble, which is formed from limestone, and gneiss, which is formed from granite. Metamorphic rocks often show distinct patterns and colors.
