Journal of Management Inquiry 22(1)

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, 3-day-per-week, 100-min-per-session, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness of 12-year-old children. The study was conducted in a school setting. The children were randomly assigned to an experimental group (n = 15) and a control group (n = 15). The experimental group performed the program, and the control group did not. The program consisted of 12 weeks of 3 days per week of 100-min sessions. The program included aerobic and resistance training. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and end of the program. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness than the control group at the end of the program. The results also showed that the experimental group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness than the control group at the beginning of the program. The results suggest that a 12-week, 3-day-per-week, 100-min-per-session, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can improve the physical fitness of 12-year-old children.

Abstract

The range of the respondent's descriptive scale allows the respondent to indicate as accurately as possible the current situation relative to the situation in the past.
