■ Green-Blacks: Another 1.6% were categorized as "green" because they had no religious beliefs, but also held strong environmental and "black" perspectives. However, specific and often controversial viewpoints such as capitalist exploitation of nature, and their acknowledgment thereof, are also to be held. These individuals have chosen to establish a positive, but also a negative, relationship with the environment. Environmentalists, for example, would often claim that environmentalists have "green" perspectives in the sense that they are "black". These perspectives are often critical of the way that environmentalists think of the environment and tend to focus on social, technological, political, economic and other non-environmental issues. Green-Blacks tend to be skeptical of environmentalism, and to be skeptical of the environmental movement.
