25. In contrast to centrally-organized health care systems, programs that are based on the concept of the individualized patient are generally more patient-centered. The major program characteristic that differentiates patient-centered health care from a centrally-organized health care system is the emphasis on the patient's role in the health care process. In centrally-organized systems, health care decisions are often made by the health care provider, while in patient-centered health care, the patient is an active participant in the decision-making process.
