Answer: (C) Spot C is the hot spot of given image
The nurse should inspect the inside of the child's mouth.
Koplik spots are small, white or bluish-white spots that appear on the inside of the cheeks, usually opposite the lower molars, in people who have measles. They are a sign of the infection and can be seen one to four days before the skin rash develops. They are surrounded by a red ring and look like grains of salt. Koplik spots are very helpful for diagnosing measles, especially when other diseases have similar symptoms.
