Essay Example on Marcus Garvey: A Hero of African-American History Essay

Marcus Garvey is perceived as one of the greatest heroes in African-American history. He is credited for leading one of the most significant organized mass movement in the history of the African-American people. He is also known as the progenitor of the modern authenticity of the Black race and culture. He has been hailed by those who shared in his ideologies, particularly in the 1920s, as a political savior of the time. Some even nicknamed him as "the Negro Moses." As such, the paper is premised on the discussion of Marcus Garvey and the vision he had for African Americans. Some of the issues that will suffice are the vision for better living standards and education, to mention but a few.

Marcus Garvey is remembered in the history of the United States because of his vision for the rights of the minority groups (Abdellatif 9). His first vision was on uniting different races through Pan-Africanism. He urged all the people to stand firm and work as a team in the bid of attaining the freedoms of the black people. He equally set a vision that fought for equality in terms of gender representation in different fields of life. One notable example can be deduced to the quest for African Americans to take part in the leadership positions to enable them to air out their grievances (Rosino and Hughey 2). He also made progression in the elimination of challenges that were undermining African-Americans, for instance, slavery and forced labor.

Marcus Garvey also had a vision of rescuing to create harmony among all people to cope with problems such as violation of human rights by the dominant groups living in the region (Blain 102). He intended to achieve a harmonious relationship through the creation of a good relationship between the majority groups of people and the African-Americans. As such, a platform was created where people from all races could meet regardless of their number in the United States and advocate for a better tomorrow.

He also foresaw the creation of socialization across all tribes to enable the African-Americans to air out their grievances such as inclusivity in terms of employment and equal sharing of resources. Marcus Garvey set the visions towards the rights of workers by leading as an example in advocating for workers' rights. He also led by example because he was at the forefront when it came to writing and publishing memorandums concerning the welfares of the workers. Most of the memoranda that were written and published showed that he wished to eradicate all forms of discrimination. He published documents that were associated with the rights of African Americans. The rights touched on job discrimination, thereby creating more opportunities for African Americans to venture into various types of jobs.

In terms of care and concern, Marcus Garvey was not only mindful about the life of the afterlife of Africans Americans after they had suffered a lot from all forms of discriminations but his most significant vision of all times was to attain the social, political, cultural, and economic success of the black people. He demonstrated these acts through his dreams. He dreamt of achieving visions that could favor political stability throughout the country, thereby helping the people to come together and interact with each other regardless of their races hence leading to cultural exchanges and boosting the economy of the country.
