A Manual Information System (MIS) is a system in which data is collected, processed, stored, and communicated without the use of automated or electronic systems. This traditional approach relies on human intervention and physical records such as ledgers, files, and paper-based documentation.

Key Components of a Manual Information System:

2. Processing – Data is processed by individuals, often requiring calculations, summarization, and analysis.
3. Storage – Physical storage of documents, files, and records in cabinets or archives.
4. Retrieval – Manual searching and retrieval of data when needed.
5. Communication – Information is shared through printed reports, memos, and face-to-face communication.
6. Security and Integrity – Relies on physical access controls and proper document handling to ensure data accuracy and protection.

Advantages of a Manual Information System:

- Low Cost: No need for expensive software or hardware.
- Simple to Implement: Does not require specialized technical knowledge.
- No Dependency on Technology: Can function without electricity or digital tools.

Disadvantages of a Manual Information System:

- Error-Prone: Higher chances of human errors in data entry and processing.
- Limited Storage and Accessibility: Physical storage requires space and can be difficult to manage.
- Security Risks: Physical documents can be lost, stolen, or damaged.
