The Secret of the Treehouse

Lila, Mia, and Carlos had the best treehouse in the neighborhood. It sat high in an old oak tree behind Lila's backyard, with a rope ladder, posters on the walls, and even a secret lock that only the three of them knew how to open. They called it their "HQ" short for headquarters.

One hot summer afternoon, the three friends met there to plan their next adventure. When Lila climbed up first, she gasped. The inside of the treehouse looked different. Someone had been there. The posters were crumpled, the snack box was empty, and on the floor was a strange map drawn on a piece of notebook paper.

"Did one of you leave that?" Lila asked, holding up the map. "No way!" Mia said, grabbing it. "It looks like... it's pointing to the creek in the woods." Carlos's eyes lit up. "Maybe it's treasure!"

They argued for a few minutes but finally decided to follow the map. The three packed water bottles, flashlights, and a bag of trail mix before heading into the woods. The creek was about fifteen minutes away, and the map led them to a hollow log beside the water. "Look inside!" whispered Lila.

Mia shined his flashlight into the log and pulled out a small, rusty tin box. Inside were three baseball cards, a shiny marble, and a note that read: Keep exploring. Adventure is everywhere. The kids looked at each other, pushed but excited. "That means someone is trying to play a game with us," Mia said. "Or maybe they want us to find more stuff!" Carlos added. Lila grinned. "Whatever it is, they know us love adventures. Let's figure out the next mystery!" The three friends raced back to the treehouse, already planning their next search.
