

Standardized Testing in School System

Standardized testing should be taken out of our school systems, to help with stress of students, teachers and so much more. Standardized testing is defined as "a test that is given to students in a very consistent manner; meaning that the questions on the test are all the same, the time given to each student is the same, and the way in which the test is scored is the same for all students." (What Is Standardized Test?)

In the United States, we use testing as a way to define students. We give these standardized tests to students and expect them to do well and get higher scores, if students do not receive an average score, the school system and teachers will then base their learning ability off of that score. Meaning that lower score takers will be in a lower class and that higher score takes will be in a more challenging class.

Standardized testing should be eliminated from the school systems due to levels of stress rising in students, teachers' curriculums are based on standardized testing, which cuts the curriculums short, and lastly, limitations on students learning.

For students to be able to succeed and stay on track for school, they must pass each state mandated test. Students having to focus most of their time on studying, and preparing for benchmarks, midterms, and finals can cause a lot of stress to their mental health. It has been proven that from pre-k to the end of senior year of high school, the average student will take up to 112 mandatory standardized tests. (Strauss, Valerie.)

Each year that can take up to 25 hours of schooling away from the students and teachers, due to the time limits set for each test. (Strauss, Valerie.) Standardized testing has always been made a big deal to the students each year, mostly because each test can cost up to 20-50 percent of the student's grades.

This percentage students look at as something that can either make or break their grades in the class. Students likely receive a rubric of the class on the first day, which have the benchmark and finals scaling on the final grade.

The first day is when the students start to get that hint of stress already. Stress of students can start as early as grade 3. Grade 3 to grade 8 is proven as the grades that spend the more on standardized testing. 16 to 18 hours. (Lazarin, 2014)Standardized testing is something that can determine a high schoolers chances of getting into their first-choice colleges. (From ACT & SA
