Performance of the Defense Acquisition System - 2013 Annual Report - 28 June 2013 United States Government US Army,2013-08-18 While the United States achieves its national security missions by equipping its military forces with the best weapons systems in the world questions continue about the performance of the defense acquisition system How effective is it How can that effectiveness be objectively measured Can we use those measures to affect behaviors with appropriate incentives or determine which policies and procedures improve results and which turn out to be misguided Answering these questions requires more than opinion It requires analysis of unbiased data to discover insights into underlying effects These in turn will inform better policy and programmatic decisions This is the first in a series of planned annual reports on the performance of the defense acquisition system its programs institutions workforce managers executives and industrial partners By using objective data and analysis to measure performance these reports will identify underlying drivers and inform future decisions on programs policies and processes This first report focuses primarily on performance related to Major Defense Acquisition Programs MDAPs The report focuses on more in depth indicators of system outcomes particularly with respect to cost and schedule and does so by looking at various institutional trends How does the portfolio of major programs perform over time What has changed how and by how much Are there differences associated with leadership Are there differences among DoD organizations Are there differences among our industrial partners This report also reflects results to date from the compliance of the Department of Defense DoD with the Improve Acquisition Act of 2010 on performance assessments of the defense acquisition system While similarly motivated our efforts will go beyond the specifics of this act to seek additional insights for improving the performance of the defense acquisition system In addition this study will be used in part to fulfill a recent request from the Office of Management and Budget for an evidence based analytic study on acquisition performance Readily available data allowed us to provide historical baselines on acquisition performance and some initial insights into whether performance has or has not improved recently They also demonstrate that it can take many years to see the results of new policies making it even more important to test and inform those policies Although existing data can be effectively leveraged to improve our understanding a lesson learned is that gaps remain therefore I initiated a strategic initiative to identify those key data gaps and begin selective collection of new data for future analysis That work will continue and will inform future reports Since this initial report focuses primarily on analyzing MDAP development and early production information it cannot be considered a complete picture of the entire acquisition system Future reports will delve into areas such as contracting acquisition of services technology development industrial base concerns etc Value obtained in acquisition is a balance of costs benefits and prudent risks Risks are a fact of life in acquiring the kinds of products our warfighters need and these risks must be objectively managed Additionally demands and threats do change in both the short and long term so the acquisition system must be able to respond In some cases cost growth results from prudent changes in quantity or capability of acquired systems Our ultimate measure of performance is providing effective systems to the warfighter that are suitable for fielding at costs that are affordable while ensuring taxpayers money is spent as productively as possible Only through rigorous analysis and clear reporting will we be able to separate and account for acceptable and unacceptable types of cost growth informing our discussions within DoD with Congress our Allies and the American public Army Doctrine Publication Adp 1 the Army with Change 2, 6 August 2013

United States Government US Army,2013-08-15 This capstone doctrine publication Army Doctrine Publication ADP 1 The Army frames how we as the Soldiers and Civilians of the United States Army think about the strategic environment develop and refine doctrine and chart a course into the future It is my vision of how the world has changed and how we as an Army will adapt to those changes ensuring that we remain the world's dominant land force and a crucial contributor to the joint team A key component of the way ahead is remaining focused on the professionalism of our force Our Army Values are the essence of who we are and those values rely on a bedrock of mutual trust among Soldiers leaders Families and the American people that we serve Over the past 237 years the United States Army has proudly served the Nation by winning its wars and securing the peace Our history is marked by decisive action in a wide range of missions including regular and irregular warfare humanitarian assistance operations engagement with allies and support to civil authorities Today our Army is entering not only a period of transition but also great opportunity The strategic environment has grown increasingly complex Technological advances have created new ways to communicate with to understand and to influence others Technology also empowers a much wider range of actors we must consider and interact with to include those that come together virtually in cyberspace unbounded by physical geography At the same time a decade of war has reinforced timeless lessons about the centrality of human beings in all aspects of military operations We must build on these insights to change how we think about plan for and conduct all of our operations Although some will argue that technology will simplify future military operations the evidence overwhelmingly indicates that warfare remains a fundamentally human endeavor Direct engagement with people has always been and remains a core strength of the United States Army We must recognize and fully embrace the changes in the environment that offer us new avenues to maintain our preeminence As part of the joint force the United States Army ensures mission accomplishment guarantees national security interests compels adversaries prosecutes military campaigns and delivers lasting strategic results It is what the American people expect and what our Nation's continued freedom demands Warfighting is our primary mission Everything that we do should be grounded in this fundamental principle We must be responsive to combatant commanders as part of the joint force rapidly dominating any operational environment across the range of military operations U.S. Army War College Key Strategic Issues List - Part I
