

Graphing is an important procedure used by scientists to display the data that is collected during a controlled experiment. When a graph is put together incorrectly, it detracts the reader from understanding what you are trying to present. Most graphs contain 5 major parts:

- Title
- The independent variable (X-axis)
- The dependant variable (Y-axis)
- Scale for each variable
- Legend (or key)

- The Title - depicts what the graph is about. Reading the title gives the reader an understanding about the graph. A good title is closer to a sentence than a phrase and is usually found at the top of the graph.
- Independent Variable - the variable that can be controlled by the experimenter. Common independent variables include time (date, minutes, hours, seconds, years, generations), length/depth (feet, meters, inches, centimeters), or temperature (Celcius) to name a few. This variable is put on the X-axis.
- Dependent Variable - the variable that is affected directly by the independent variable. It is the result of what happens because of the independent variable. Example: How many oxygen bubbles are produced by a plant located a different depths below water. The number of oxygen bubbles will depend on the depth of the water. This variable is put on the Y-axis.
- Scale - before you can plot your data points, you must figure out how much each box on your graph paper is worth. Scale doesn't always have to start at zero, but is must be consistent. If you start off making each box worth 5cm, each subsequent box must also be 5cm. Always make sure your scale is labeled with what it is and what it is measured in.
- Legend - a short description about the graph's data. Most often used to show what different patterns or colors stand for on your graph.

Q1: The following graph is a fair to good example of a graph. In the t-chart, list what they did well and what they need to fix.

Good	Bad
1. Title given	1. Title isn't specific
2. Labels used	2. What types of robbery?
3. Key given/color coded
4. Scale consistent*

* Values remain the same for each break, line or tick

** We need to know location, types of robbery, how time is measured, how robberies were reported, etc

Q2: The graph to the right is a bad graph. What parts is it missing?

Title, axis labels with variables and units, key or legend
