Many scholars continue to debate the degree to which the United States is a "superpower." For example, "America is a super-power because it has the capacity to influence the world's political, economic, and cultural affairs" (Barnett, 2002, p. 10). Others argue that the United States is no longer a superpower because it has lost its military and economic dominance (e.g., "The United States is no longer a superpower" (Barnett, 2002, p. 10)).
