

1.3 Studying Life

Lesson Objectives

- LO1 List the characteristics of living things.
- LO2 Identify the common themes of biology.
- LO3 Explain how cells are the unit of structure and function in living things.
- LO4 Discuss the importance of communication between cells.

Lesson Summary

Characteristics of Living Things Living things are alive. Living things share other characteristics. They can move, obtain and store a sufficient quantity of energy, they extract and use materials and energy in specific cell structures, they reproduce, they respond to changes in their environment (stimuli), and maintain a stable biological environment (homeostasis).

Living Systems Living things are biological systems. Living systems have many subunits.

- i. Cells are the basic units of living things, and tissues, organs, and systems.
- ii. Cells interact and communicate. Living things can pass on genetic material, receive and store it, and pass it on to other cells.
- iii. Materials and energy Living things receive their energy from sunlight, inorganic materials, and energy. The energy from sunlight is stored in carbohydrates and oxygen. These are then used by living things to carry out their processes.
- iv. Homeostasis, the development, and organization. All living things reproduce, for example, by reproduction, while others move, grow, and store energy until it is used for organization. In small organisms there is simple organization, while in larger organisms organization is complex and organized for homeostasis.
- v. Communication. Living things communicate in different ways, using chemical messengers.
- vi. Organization. Within an organism, living things interact, function as a common system.
- vii. Homeostasis and hierarchy. Small, simple groups of organisms have specific and coordinated characteristics that make them good organisms.
- viii. Energy and interdependence. All living things are interconnected, similar to the continuous forest.
- ix. Homeostasis and life processes. All living things are homeostatically similar at the cellular level.
- x. Homeostasis and ecology. Homeostasis is important for life but it leads to "no life and no ecology."

Living and Nonliving Living things have living characteristics. They live and have different levels of activity. Whereas nonliving things have... physical structures, and nonliving things.

Common Themes of Biology All living organisms have the characteristics we've been discussing throughout this chapter. These are known as the common themes of biology. The common themes of biology are: organization, homeostasis, energy, and living organisms.
