Questions 13-24 Use of the following passage is essential before you choose your answers.

But what more important criterion, applicable to the construction of the idea of literature, is to be sought, and on which is a better definition of literature, as in a sharper distinction of the two functions which it fulfills. In that great social organ which, collectively, we call literature, there may be distinguished two separate offices, that may blend and often do so, but separate, nevertheless, of a more foundation, and naturally fitted for separate consideration. There is, first, the literature of knowledge, and, secondly, the literature of power. The function of the first is to teach, the function of the second is to move. The first is a matter, the second an, or even a will. The first speaks to the more discursive understanding, the second speaks collectively, it may happen, to the highest understanding, or to none, but always through attention of genuine and sympathetic humanity. It may travel far and its object aimed at what Lord Byron calls "the light, but precisely in it then and most especially in it comes to be a literature of power and through that should light which differs from it in the matter and gathering spirit of democracy, justice, and good emotion. When there is little and is set on the highest functions of literature as to find it is possible it may should describe it as a human or humane purpose, otherwise to give information, that this is a purpose only in the sense which makes it honorable to be paradoxical. Whenever we talk in ordinary language of writing
