A dual transition-to a consolidated democracy and an advanced market economy-represents the main challenge that the Korean political and economic system currently confronts. During the two decades since it became a democracy. South Korea has faced lingering problems, such as poor governance, high-level corruption, lack of leadership, political conflicts, social polarisation, volatile public opinions, and lack of consensus on major issues.

At the same time, profound leadership changes have fundamentally changed the South Korean political landscape. The new leadership has attempted to dismantle social, economic, and political structures that were formed during the Cold War and to establish a more democratic and diplomatically independent society. Such an approach has resulted in further social and political conflict trials and errors in policy, civic distrust, and a lingering leadership crisis.

Although Korean democracy is successfully consolidated, it is far from effective. There are profound generational cleavages over various national issues, including economic and social policies. Policies toward North Korea and national defences, and attitudes towards the United States and China. Under these circumstances, political institutions have been pushed aside, and civic organisations are dominant.

- 2. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below in your own words. 10

The voice had to be listened to, not only on account of its form but for the matter which it delivered. It gave a message to the country that it needed greatly. It brought to the common people a realization of their duty to concern themselves with their affairs. The common people were made to take an interest in the manner in which they were governed, in the taxes they paid, in the returns they received from those taxes. This interest in public affairs- politics as you may call it-was to be the concern no longer of the highly educated few but of the many-the poor, the propertyless, the working men in town and country.

Politics was not to be the concern of a small aristocracy of intellect or property of the masses. And with the change in the subjects of politics that this Voice brought about also a change in the objects of politics. Till then politics had busied itself mainly with the machinery of Government, towards making its personnel more native, with proposals for a better distribution of political power, with protests
