Chapter 10: Examining the Three Branches of Government

1. How has the government that created the state changed in 1911 (the Constitution)?

The government has changed in many ways, including the fact that it is now a federal government, meaning that it is made up of many different states, each of which has its own government. This has led to a more complex system of government, with many different levels of government and many different types of laws and regulations.

2. How and why did the federal system develop?

The federal system developed as a result of the fact that the states were not able to handle the growing complexity of the nation's affairs. The states needed a central government to coordinate their actions and to provide for the common defense and welfare of the nation.

3. How has the federal government's role in the economy changed over time?

The federal government's role in the economy has changed significantly over time. In the early years of the nation, the federal government's role was limited to the regulation of interstate commerce and the protection of the nation's borders. Over time, the federal government's role has expanded to include the regulation of the national economy, the provision of social services, and the protection of the environment.

4. Explain the three branches of government and why each is needed.

a. The executive branch

The executive branch is responsible for the execution of the laws and the management of the government's day-to-day operations. It is headed by the president, who is elected by the people for a four-year term.

b. The legislative branch
