

ECON 201 : Principles of microeconomics

CHAP 1

What's it all about?

- Economics studies human behavior to better understand and improve our world
- Aggregate output in a national economy:
  - o A national economy is a complete multi-sector system, made up of household, business, financial and government sector. Each sector is an aggregate of many smaller economic units with very similar characteristics.
  - o Sectors affect each other, so the workings of the macroeconomy are more complex than the sum of its parts.
  - o Macroeconomics: the study of the economy as a system on which interactions and feedbacks among sectors determine national output, employment and prices.
- Individual behavior:
  - o Microeconomics: the study of individual behavior in the context of scarcity.
    - It seeks to understand how we make choices and how those choices affect our behavior in the workplace, marketplace and society more generally.
    - Also concerns business choices
    - The goal is always to do the best you can, given the constraints imposed by the operating environment.
- Markets and government:
  - o Mixed economies: goods and services are supplied both by private suppliers and government
  - o Economics seeks to explain how markets and specialization might yield gains for individuals and society (more worth it for me to work and buy food than grow my own food, using the market is an advantage for me)
  - o We also focus on governments, how it manages the economy through fiscal and monetary policy, how it redistributes through the tax transfer system, how it supplies information to buyers and sets safety standards for products.

Understanding through the use of models:

- Model: a formalization of theory that facilitates scientific inquiry. (framework we use to organize how we think about a problem)
- Theory: a logical view of how things work, and is frequently formulated on the basis of observation.
- The model reduces and simplifies the theory to manageable dimensions.
