This volume offers a fresh translation and the first English language commentary of Pomponius Mela an Iberian intellectual who wrote a three book geographical description of the Roman world under the emperor Claudius The translation is as faithful to the original Latin as possible to give the Latinless reader a real taste of Mela's style In the detailed commentary Irby highlights Mela's sources Herodotus Sallust and Caesar among others and stylistic influences including Vergil Ovid Livy and Horace she examines Mela's entertaining digressions into ethnography paradoxography and mythology and she offers at least one interesting or quirky detail about most places insofar as independent information exists the sort of information that Mela would want his readers to know or the bizarre details that would have delighted him Irby shows how Mela reworked his evidence and balanced his identity as an Iberian for example by promoting his Phoenician heritage and a Roman citizen by emulating especially Sallust and Caesar Finally the commentary is keyed to the Barrington Atlas Readers are further aided in finding their way through Mela's world with three maps by the Ancient World Mapping Center and two schematic maps
