Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus (S. aureus) is a leading cause of nosocomial infection and the development of resistance among strains is a major concern. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of methicillin-resistant S. aureus (MRSA) in the intensive care unit (ICU) of a tertiary care hospital. A total of 100 S. aureus isolates were collected from the ICU and tested for methicillin resistance. The results showed that 45% of the isolates were resistant to methicillin. The study also found that the majority of the resistant isolates were obtained from patients who had been in the ICU for more than 48 hours. These findings suggest that MRSA is a significant problem in the ICU and that efforts should be made to reduce the duration of hospitalization and to implement infection control measures to prevent the spread of the bacteria.
