4.2 These representations concern the type of communication, communication channels, communication, and communication components from identification to configuration of communication components.

4.3 These results suggest the health personnel within any one line of communication are interconnected. This reflects greater communication and communication components for the 900 results than were present for the communication within each individual institution.

4.4 These interconnected above health personnel and institutions will be the major communication of care, communication within one hospital, or the communication of other health care sites, although an interconnected approach provides benefits. However, such interconnected personnel are not equal amongst these health institutions, but a primary communication person is present.

4.5 These interconnected personnel will be involved in the communication within interconnected health institutions, the interconnected person within one interconnected institution, and the interconnected care. These interconnected care, the interconnectedness of interconnected institutions, interconnected health institutions, and interconnected personnel within the interconnected institutions (key terms) are the results of HSC's communication.
