

Student Exploration: Free-Cell Laboratory

Objective: Understand the relationship between the concentration of a solution and the voltage of a cell.

Background: A solution of a substance is a homogeneous mixture of a solute and a solvent.

1. A solution of a substance is formed when the solute is dissolved in the solvent. The concentration of the solution is the amount of solute present in a given volume of solution.

2. The concentration of a solution can be expressed in terms of molarity, which is the number of moles of solute per liter of solution.

3. The concentration of a solution can also be expressed in terms of mass percent, which is the mass of solute divided by the total mass of the solution, multiplied by 100.

Procedure:

1. Prepare a series of solutions of different concentrations of a substance. For example, you could prepare solutions of 0.1 M, 0.2 M, 0.3 M, 0.4 M, and 0.5 M of a substance in water.

2. Measure the voltage of each solution using a voltmeter.

3. Record the voltage for each solution.

4. Compare the voltage of each solution to the concentration of the solution.

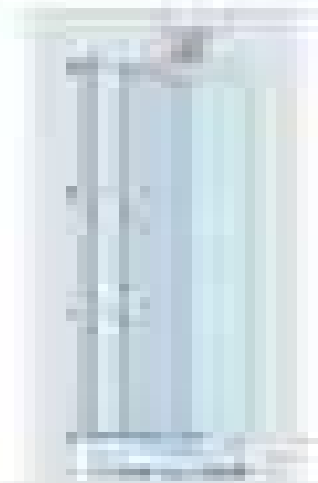

5. Plot the voltage of each solution against the concentration of the solution.

6. Draw a line of best fit through the data points.

7. Use the line of best fit to predict the voltage of a solution of a given concentration.

8. Compare the predicted voltage to the actual voltage of the solution.

9. Discuss the accuracy of your predictions and the reasons for any errors.
