

CARDIOVASCULAR SYSTEM

The major structures of the cardiovascular system, the heart and blood vessels, play a vital role in human physiology. The major function of the cardiovascular system is transportation. Using blood as the transport vehicle, the system carries nutrients, gases, wastes, antibodies, electrolytes, and many other substances to and from body cells. Its purposeful flow is the circulating heart.

The anatomy and location of the heart and blood vessels and the important understandings of cardiovascular physiology (for example, cardiac cycle, ECG, and regulation of blood pressure) are the major topics of this chapter.

The heart is a cone-shaped muscular organ located within the thorax. Its apex rests on the diaphragm, and its base is at the level of the superior ribs. The coronary arteries that surround the myocardium arise from the aorta. The coronary sinus empties into the right atrium. Relative to the walls of the heart chambers, the left atrium are receiving chambers, whereas the right atrium are discharging chambers. The myocardium that lines the heart and also forms the valve flaps is called the endocardium. The outermost layer of the heart is called the pericardium. The fluid that fills the pericardial sac acts to decrease friction during heart activity. The heart muscle, or myocardium, is composed of a special kind of muscle tissue called cardiac muscle.
