x (meters)	0	4	8	12	20
$W(x)$ (degrees Fahrenheit)	55.0	57.1	61.8	67.9	73.8

The temperature of water is well approximated by a suitable increasing, concave differentiable function, W , where $W(x)$ is measured in degrees Fahrenheit and x is measured in meters. Assume $W(0) = 55$, the temperature of the water is 55°F . The function W satisfies the conditions beginning at time $t = 0$. Values of $W(x)$ at selected points x further from the shoreline are given in the table above.

(a) Explain, in terms of the table, concavity, $W'(12)$. Show the calculations that lead to your answer. (Do not round until the final step.)

(b) Use the data provided to estimate $\int_0^{20} W'(x) dx$. Using correct units, interpret the meaning of $\int_0^{20} W'(x) dx$ in the context of this problem.

(c) For $W(x)$, $x \in [0, 20]$, the average temperature of the water is the value $\frac{1}{20} \int_0^{20} W(x) dx$. (a) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (b) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (c) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (d) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (e) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (f) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (g) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (h) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (i) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (j) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (k) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (l) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (m) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (n) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (o) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (p) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (q) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (r) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (s) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (t) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (u) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (v) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (w) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (x) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (y) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c). (z) Let W_{avg} denote the average temperature indicated by the data in the table in question (c).

(d) For $W(x)$, $x \in [0, 20]$, the function W that models the water temperature has first derivative given by $W'(x) = 0.44e^{0.05x} - 0.0001x$. Based on the model, what is the temperature of the water at time $t = 20$?

a. $W(10) = \frac{W(0) + W(20)}{2} = 64.4$

$W(10) = 64.4^\circ\text{F}$

Approximated value at which the water is increasing at 0.44°F/m

b. $W(0) + W(20) = 128.8$

Mean value theorem

c. $\int_0^{20} W'(x) dx = W(20) - W(0) = 73.8 - 55 = 18.8$

Since approximation underestimates the actual average temperature of the water, increase the function's value by increasing each in each interval by one-half percent each.

d. $\int_0^{20} W'(x) dx = W(20) - W(0) = 18.8$
