Characteristics of Living Things Living things are like plants and rocks. Living things share other characteristics. They can move, obtain and store a sufficient quantity of food, they extract and use materials and energy in order to live, they respond to changes in their environment (stimuli), and communicate with other biological organisms. These characteristics are called common themes.

Living, Nonliving, and Nonbiological The study of biology involves several different kinds of living things.

- LO1 Living things and cells. Living things are made of cells.
- LO2 Cells, tissues, and organs. Living things are built up of different types of cells, tissues and organs. These are called cellular organization.
- LO3 Organisms and ecosystems. Living things consist of populations (just individuals) and communities, and ecosystems. The community of all the living things in a given area forms a biotic community and ecosystems. Biotic communities are called biotic organization.
- LO4 Individuals, populations, and organizations. All living things reproduce, live, respond, communicate, and grow. Within these three processes there are three other ones called a biotic organization. The individual organization is simpler organisms produce offspring (reproduction) for them. Populations grow and develop as they mature.
- LO5 Organisms. Living things consist of cells with specific internal components.
- LO6 Organisms. Within an organism living things are cells, tissues and a common energy.
- LO7 Populations and biomes. Biotic organization groups of organisms have similar and related characteristics that make them a biotic organization.
- LO8 Energy and life cycles of cells. All living things are heterotrophs—similar to the nonliving world.
- LO9 Homeostasis and life processes. All living cells are plants and animals that are biological living things.
- LO10 Communication and relationships. Relationships is part of that cell that is part of the biotic organization.

Living and Nonliving Biology is the study of living things. Nonliving things are not living and do not have life. These include nonliving things—physical systems and nonbiological things.

Nonliving and Biological Nonliving things. Nonliving things have the characteristics of living things, but without life. These are called nonbiological processes. The nonliving things grow and develop, communicate, and respond to changes in their environment. The most important role in the living world is relationships.
