NFA Series

A Flexible and Intuitive User Interface

The user interface on the new NFA series of Noise Figure Analyzers is intuitive and easy to use, with easy-to-flip keys, which are well and thin placed in the relevant keys corresponding the function. The soft-key keypads have been kept to a minimum and these are clear visual indicators on the screen showing the current measurement state.

Easy Measurement Setup

The NFA series of Noise Figure Analyzers now takes the pain out of complex measurement setups, with the simple test instruction menu. The built-in help function gives key functions and measure programming commands, that should eliminate the need to carry manuals or help setting up measurements.

Low Instrumentation Uncertainty

When making noise figure measurements, a key parameter to measure is the measurement uncertainty. The NFA has a low measurement uncertainty, making it well suited for accurate and repeatable measurements of noise figure in design verification. In addition, the built-in calibration function makes it easy to set up. Agilent has programmed a web-based noise calibration calculator that will give customers information on how to improve and classify their measurement setup's uncertainty more accurately.

Please see the information, what our web site at: www.agilent.com/find/nfa

Increase Measurement Throughput

For making fast noise figure measurements, fast measurement speed and expandability are critical. The NFA series of Noise Figure Analyzers have two faster measurement rates, making measurement times a lot faster throughput. The frequency limit function will cover your test needs, especially products within a complete measurement span to make your measurement. The Sweep averaging function is ideal as a read-time reduction for the correct setting of measurement, as your instrument will give the measure of the DUT during a sweep. Both these functions, are well suited for the limit functionality for quick and easy pass/fail testing as well as the additional ability to easily complete calibration, test measurement, measurement productivity and measurement throughput.

Enhanced Connectivity

The built-in Gigabit click driver, GPIB, RS232C well suited. Parallel port, a connector of low quality and easy to transfer between the analyzer as well as PC or workstation. There is also a built-in VGA connection for connecting a large screen monitor.

Color Graphical Display

The enhanced usability, the new Noise Figure Analyzers now come with an integrated 17 cm Full color LCD display. For a full feature viewing of noise figure and gain against frequency. There are three different modes for viewing measurement, the three separate measurement are combined graph display, a table format, and a joint frequency noise figure and gain measurement "matrix" format.

Ease of Automation

The NFA series of Noise Figure Analyzers include 2 industry-standard GPIB ports and an RS232C serial port, as well as the automated control of the instrument. The second GPIB port is dedicated to Local oscillator control. The default control language is SCPI, but users can also define custom LO commands.

Ease of Integration

To assist with the integration of the new analyzer into manufacturing environments, Agilent has provided a Programmatic Reference Manual containing example programs to help integrate to the user's system. The NFA is most code compatible with the N7300, user can control the N7314C.
