While the expected cost differential of 20% might be expected to make it more difficult to attract investment, it is not clear that this will be the case. The fact that the cost differential is not as large as it might be, given the differences in the quality of the infrastructure, is a positive sign.

from the fact that some individuals may choose to remain in the low wage sector to receive a higher wage rate. In this case, the wage rate in the low wage sector is not a constant but a function of the wage rate in the high wage sector. This is the case in the model of the low wage sector in the paper by K. J. G. Lommerud and J. K. Lommerud (2004).
