Therefore, there is one more important effect of increasing the number of respondents. According to equation (1), the number of respondents will not affect the average response rate. However, it is important to note that given the same number of respondents, the number of non-respondents will be smaller for the higher responding threshold and the number of respondents will be larger for the lower responding threshold. Therefore, the number of respondents will be smaller for the higher responding threshold and larger for the lower responding threshold. It means that there are more non-respondents for the higher responding threshold and more respondents for the lower responding threshold.
