

Atomic Spectra

Light, Energy, and Electron Structure

Introduction

When a pure atomic gas such as hydrogen or helium is subjected to a high-voltage electrical discharge, light is produced and the gas glows. When this light is observed through a diffraction grating, a series of bright colored lines is observed. The series of bright lines is called an atomic emission spectrum and is unique to each element. In this activity, a spectroscopic scope will be used to view the "bright line" emission spectra of different elements and determine their wavelengths. A spectroscopic scope contains a diffraction grating that separates light into its component wavelengths.

Concepts

- Atomic emission spectrum
- Quantization of energy
- Electron energy levels
- Electron transitions

Materials

Colored pencils or crayons

Gas discharge (spectrum) tubes, such as hydrogen, helium, mercury, and neon

Light sources, such as incandescent and fluorescent lightbulbs, street lamps, neon signs, and novelty "neon" lamps

Power supply

Ring clamps, 2 (optional)

Ring stand (optional)

Spectroscopic

Safety Precautions

Spectrum tubes operate at very high voltages and can produce a large electric shock. Do not touch the ends of the tube when the power supply is on. Do not touch the contacts on the transformer when the power is on. Make sure the power supply is turned off before inserting or removing the spectrum tube. To extend the life of the tubes, do not leave the tubes on for more than 30–45 sec at a time—cycle the power on and off as needed to complete the observations. Spectrum tubes may get very hot. Never touch a spectrum tube when the power is on. After turning off the power, allow the tube to cool before removing it from the power supply.

Procedure

1. Using a spectroscopic, observe the continuous "rainbow" spectrum from an incandescent lightbulb.
2. Observe the colors of light in the visible spectrum and the wavelength range for each band. Sketch the spectrum of white light using colored pencils in appropriate wavelength boxes. Note that the units of wavelength on the spectroscopic are nanometers ($1 \text{ nm} = 10^{-9} \text{ m}$).
3. Optional: For optimum viewing of the emission spectra of gas discharge tubes, stabilize the spectroscopic on a ring stand. Set up a ring stand in front of the power supply and attach one ring clamp. Place the spectroscopic on the ring clamp and adjust the height of the ring clamps so that the eyepiece on the spectroscopic is approximately level with the middle of the gas discharge tube. Attach a second ring clamp on top of the spectroscopic so that it will be held firmly in position without moving.
4. With the power OFF, ask the instructor to insert the hydrogen spectrum tube between the contacts on the power supply.
5. Move the power supply so that the spectrum tube is about 3–5 cm away from the spectroscopic.
6. Turn on the power on the power supply and observe the atomic emission spectrum of hydrogen.
