There are extremely rare circumstances where a person is not the parent of the child. Examples of the relevant aspects of the law are considered in chapters 10 and 11. Some rare cases may also be relevant to family law, for example, in relation to child support, child custody and child care and education systems, discrimination in various aspects and financial and taxation issues and a common-law partner.

Reptiles and amphibians are ectotherms and cannot regulate their body temperature internally. Reptiles must use the sun to warm themselves and absorb heat from the ground. They are cold-blooded. Amphibians are also ectotherms and must live in moist environments. They are cold-blooded. Birds are endotherms and can regulate their body temperature internally. They are warm-blooded. Mammals are endotherms and can regulate their body temperature internally. They are warm-blooded.
